

Present Vs Past

SOFIA MUALIM

Introduction

After Spaniards conquer natives the colonial period started and Spaniards, Africans, creoles, meztizo and natives have to adapt to a different lifestyle in the city and the countryside.

Colonial period was a lot of years ago and a lot of things have changed like cloth or women's role but also a lot of things have still familiar today like for example me and my family eat empanadas the 18 of September and we eat all days "once".

The idea of this scrapbook is to compare the colonial period and now a days. And also to see how my family past affect me and my family today.

Cazuela

My grandparents and colonial times

When I was little on Sundays we ate lunch as a family something more special than the week I still eating with my grandchildren and my family.

I used to play with cards with my family but now a days kids are used to play and have fun with tecnology.

How do my ancestor's traditions define my family's traditions now a days?

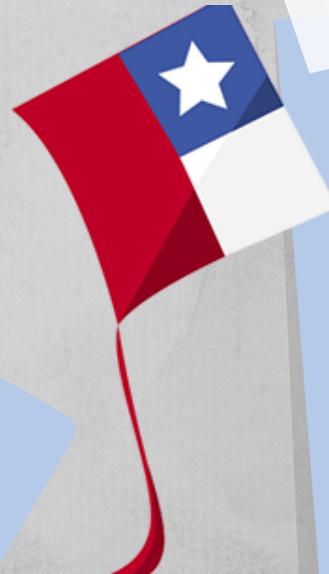

What my dad buys or cooks when its raining

My grandmother taught my mom how to play cards and my mom taught me and my brother how to play.

My grandparent taught my mom how to fly a kite and she taught me how to fly a kite

Me and my family traditions

The traditions that my family have and give to me determine what I am today and the traditions that we have.

As a family we eat empanadas, sopaipillas and mote con huesillo so we keep traditions.

The scrapbook that you already read is about my family's heritage and how present is related to the colonial period. A lot of things have changed but also some things we can still see them in our daily life.

My name is Sofía Mualim, the author of this scrapbook. I was born the 19 of December, 2009 in Santiago, Chile. My dad is called Cristobal and my mom Ximena, and I have a brother that is named Matias. I like to ride my bike and go to the hill with my family and friends.
